Rain Water Harvesting

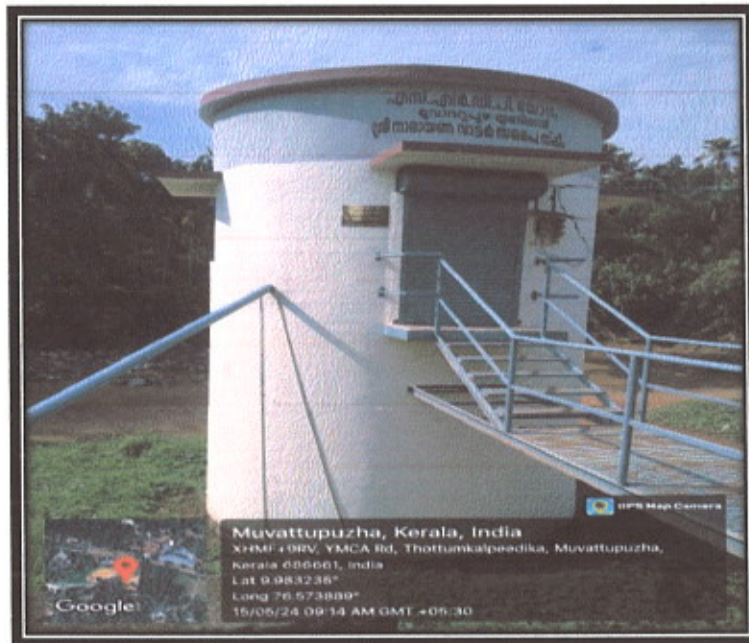

SNCE has a rain water conservation unit by capturing rainwater and reducing surface runoff during heavy rains. Then allowing it to percolate. This reduces the strain on traditional water sources, especially in the months of facing water scarcity and helps in sustaining water availability in wells and boreholes. This green practice can reduce energy consumption associated with pumping and treating water over long distances and provide climate resilience. We depends only upon the natural water resources of the institution for its water requirements.

Manure Making

The institution make use of vermin compost unit and waste pits in order to dispose the waste effectively and make manure on-site. Unlike synthetic fertilizers, natural manure releases nutrients slowly, reducing the risk of groundwater contamination and minimizing environmental impact. Natural manure aligns with sustainable agricultural practices by recycling organic waste materials and reducing reliance on non-renewable resources.

Water for Birds in summer

Students of SNCE offer water to birds during hot summer days as water sources became scarce, making it difficult for birds to find enough to drink. By providing water can attract diverse range of bird species to our yard and play a vital role in supporting local wildlife and contributing to the ecological balance of our environment.
